HIGH HONORS TO SENATOR MARTIN

reviewed the history of the plan and acwhen his voice might have nided in the when his voice might have aided in the enactment of such a plan, and answered his claim that he was not a delegate by saying that he had made a speech at the inst three conventions, but nowhere in it had he mentioned the primary. "When he charges that I have done nothing, I ask you what has he done? (Cries of "nothing.") He is a phrase builder and a rhetorician, but if he has actually done anything I will be glad if some one will tell me. He has not done so. He charges that I was without experience when I was elected to the Senate. Suppose It were true; should you make the same mistake and elect him without experience, when I have now served you ten years?"

Taking up the charge that he was unknown when elected to the Senate, the speaker traced in some detail the long debt litigation and his services to the State in effecting the Olect settlement.

Adverting to the method of electing senators the speaker said: Suppose I honestly differed with him; what difference would that make? The townbuffoon might think the new way was the better and your best citizen might think the old was. Would you send the town buffoon to the Senate for that reason?"

His Opposition: enactment of such a plan, and answered son?

His Opposition:

The Secutor gave his reasons for opposing the primary plan at Roanoke, stating his reasons as they have been stated before. He declared that in its inception the movement for senatorial inception the movement for senatorial primaries was gotten up by a coterie of politicians, each hopins he would get the plum. He charged the Governor with complaining of the expense in the present campaign when there are many candidates sharing it, and showed the inconsistency of his position in wisaling to impose on the Senator half the entire expense six years expo. Yet, that, was the plan of the little coterie of conspirators, seeking to drive me from public life if plan of the little coterie of conspirators, seeking to drive me from public life if I did not pay.

The Governor, he said, had charged him with controlling the convention of 1904 and refusing to endorse his administration, yet had falled to give him credit for enacting the primary plan which was adopted by the same convention. If he were responsible for one he should be accorded the credit for the other.

Taking up the conversation of the Governor on the book question the speaker relierated with withering sarcasm the Governor's change of base on that issue, and then attacked him vigorously on the school register scandal.

Sarcasm and Satire.

Taking up a letter written by the Govopening of the canvass, the senator with keen sareasm and witherins sattre dissected the document, amid great outbursts of laughter from the audience. Here's one since he was elected to the Senate. You know his imagination is his strong point, added thespeaker, amid great laughter. He ridiculed the Governor's proposition to renew the vigor of the party, and then, taking up the reference to Rives and Hunter in the Governor's speeches, he said: "He admonishes you to return to those days, and with becoming modesty picks himself out as their successor." pening of the canvass, the senator with you to return to those days, and with becoming modesty picks himself out as their successor."

Taking up the Governor's statement that he had no boss in Virginia, the speaker asked if it would not have been better had he had one. He declared that he had one at home, and that he made a mistake whenever he disregarded her judgment and advice. "I did that at King George," said the speaker, "and shot off my tongue when I ought not to have done so." This was understood to be a reference to the Corporation Commission matter. The Governor had said he would be no boss in Washington. "He never said a truer thing," added the speaker, and a great burst of laughter. When the Governor had charged that he controlled the State Committee he had offered a bold, hald insult to the sixtyone men coapposing the two committees and to the chalman.

Various utterances of the Governor in his speeches were made the target for his keen sarcasm and found sympathetic response from the audience. After haying poked fun at his competitor to the delight of his audience for half an hour, the speaker reviewed his own record and the results of his department running, and aroused great enthusiasm by his reference to his work in the matter of the Appoinantox diversion plans.

Colorless Man.

Colorless Man.

Colorless Man.

Senator Martin took up the Governor's charge that he was a colorless man, and searched the Governor's curver for evidences of colorlessness. He detalled at some length the Governor's silence in the matter of the Lee monument bill, suggesting that the vice-presidential aspirations and a regard for the vote of Northern delegates may have had something to do with this. A man in Fristol had suggested to him another explanation of the Governor's action in this matter. It was that probably the Governor was saying that niche in Statuary Hall for himself. Th's sally provided much laughter.

In concluding, Senator Martin took up the issue of machines, on which he said the Governor was now making a canvass, and charged him with heading the only muchine in Virginia and with reying "stop thief" to divert attention from himself and his own machine.

In the course of the address Senator Martin necessarily covered much of the ground touched upon in former speeches, but his sarcasm was keener and more searching and his saiter more biting than in his former addresses. He held the attention of the great crowd to the close and was given a great ovation at the congratulate bim.

After the speech the senator was invited to the Elks' Home, where he was accorded a brilliant reception and a band contert, and witnessed a fine display of fireworks. Here he met hundreds of the best-known young men in the city.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.) porting Martin.

He put special emphasis on his position with reference to the primary system, and denounced as untrue the statement made by his opponent that he was never known to be in favor of primaries until he became a candidate for the Senate. He demonstrated beyond question by his record and by the files of newspapers, some of them now supporting Martin, that he was an advocate of the primary system long before he became a candidate either for Governor or Senator.

He said that he did not advocate it in the Rounoke convention in 1857, because he had no chance, as he was not a member of that convention, but that at the May conference in Richmond, in May, 1838 he made a speech in favor of primaries, and that the system was adopted by the Norfolk convention in 1901, which also nominated him by an overwhelming majority for Governor, and that his advocacy of it at that time was fully understood by everybody.

On the other hand he said that Senator Martin was never known to say or do one thing in advocacy of the primary until the Richmond convention of 1904, when he simply moved the adoption of a report which preserved the system and when he

MONTAGUE SPEAKS IN PORTSMOUTH

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
NORFOLK, VA., August 18.—Governor Montague spoke to a crowded house in the Lyceum of Portsmouth to-night. He referred to the necessity of organization and declared that the organization of the people of this country showed what power there is in the union of the people to do certain things which are good for the people. He deprecated some of the corporate organizations, but sufgested that their cure could be worked by the people; therefore he urged that the people use the ballot for that purpose. If the people are competent to vote for the member of the lower house of Congress, they are competent to cleet the members of the Senate. He advocated the exercise of that privilege, despite the fact that he was said to be in the enemy's country, where some of the membros of the audience might not vote for him.

He referred to Gas Addicks and to Quay as holding up the elections in Pennsylvania and Delaware, that when the Legislatures would not elect them as senators, they would not allow any one else to be elected. He said he wore no man's collar about his neck, but he did not repeat the dramatic incident of jerking the handkerchief from his neck which excited so much applause in a speech in Norfolk three weeks ago.

The checking and the applause was slight till the speaker referred to the local newspaper, not by name, but under the term of the press, then there was a burst of applause.

The speech was eloquent and entertaining. The audience listened for an hour and a half.

He said, however, that tobacco landed on the piers at New York, direct from Havana, was likely to be in better condition than if it were landed at Tampa, kept some time in a bonded warehouse, and then reshipped to New York by ruit. I could not understand, therefore, why tobacco, enough to make a million cigars, if it is filler leaf, and five million if it is wrafper, should have been shipped to New York under such circumstances. York under such circumstances.

Close Watch Kept.

The Tobacco Trade has been keeping an eye on the inspection of tobacco imported via Key West, and the Treasury Department has been keeping close tan on it. In recent years a number of the large manufacturing concerns of hew York have either romoved to Tampa or have established branch factories there. The trade is suspicious that the classification of leaf tobacco at Tampa may have something to do with—the case. Neither Tampa nor Key West imports enough wrapper to wrap the number of "Clear Havdan" cigars turned out there every year. The presumption is that some are wrapped either with Piorida leaf or with Cuban tobacco, imported as filler. In the latter case the government is swindled out of $1.50 on every pound of tobacco brought in.

Now that New York firms have taken to importing their tobacco via Tampa, the situation has become acute. The Department will not rost until every bale of the particular consignment under investigation has been re-examined by the New York examiners.
